Together we...

SWARM

Take your foreign language skills to the next level.

Critical-need languages are those considered crucial to maintaining U.S. national security and international engagement and competitiveness. Proficient speakers of these languages are highly sought after by U.S. government, defense and intelligence sectors as well as international businesses and private and non-profit organizations. Begin learning a critical language at Georgia Tech's School of Modern Languages and advance your language proficiency, regional knowledge and intercultural competence through overseas study. Already studying a foreign language? Add another!

Study Abroad

GT's Language for Business and Technology (LBAT) programs offer overseas immersion in Arabic, Chinese, Korean, Japanese and Russian. ROTC students are eligible for funding to study additional critical languages through Project GO overseas programs at other institutions.

Scholarships

Georgia Tech's School of Modern Languages offers partial and full scholarships for study abroad in several critical languages. Foreign Language and Area Studies (FLAS) Fellowships are available to undergraduate and graduate students for summer or academic-year study. ROTC critical-language learners are eligible to apply for full scholarships to study abroad through Georgia Tech or any other Project GO institution.
